

Anderson Intelligencer. A NOTED CHIMNEY SWEEP.

Edward Young of New Orleans and His Wonderful Street Song. If the report of those who have been there and the testimony of people who have written upon the subject are to be relied upon, there is a vast difference between the phimney sweeps of New Orleans and those of Paris, London or even New York. This is easily accounted for on the score that the chimney sweep of New Orleans is not so much called into requisition, for the evident reason that chimneys are not so necessary a part of a man's domicile in this city. The Parisian chimney sweep is usually a small boy, who bundles himself up with rags until he presents the appearance of a great globular brush and then drops down a chimney, carrying with him the dust and soot. In New Orleans, however, the chimney sweep is a very different kind of character. He is an ordinary negro man, who smokes an old, ugly pipe and walks around the city all day singing a peculiar monotonous sort of song. which nobody can understand. The most interesting specimen of the New Orleans chimney sweep is a ne-gro named Edward Young. Young is an ordinary looking darky, but possessed of more than the ordimetto brush. But the chief character of Young is the way he advertises his business. Every chimney sweep, as he goes along the streets, has a way of calling attention to the fact that he is a chimney sweep. But Edward Young has made himself more popular than any of them by the peculiar way he calls out his profession. Everybody has heard that monoto-nous song which Young sings as he walks along. It is an impossible task to describe the song. Even a musician who knew his business would grow desperate in trying to catch his outlandish melody. And it is this melody which is now making Young plenty of money, for people with chimneys to sweep have earned to wait until they hear his woeful song in the distance. The words of the song vary, but they generally ran like this:

Mamero chimela. I want to sweep your chimney down. There would appear to be nothing striking about these words, and yet when he gets them all twisted and tangled up into that weird lay, which he manages to draw out to fully a five minutes' solo, they produce an effect which is attractive. and the time is now famous and fa-miliar. A few weeks ago a gentle-man from New York was walking of his friend, who was a New Or-leans man. "That is only a chim-ney sweep," replied the Orleanian. "Woll, I want to hear that noise again," said the New Yorker, and nothing would do but that they hunt up the chimney sweep. When he was found the New Yorker invested half a dollar in getting Young to sing it over for him. He was so much attracted by the song that the next day he arranged to have Young sing it into the mouth of a phonograph, thus preserving it. The New York gentleman took home with him the impression tube bearing the song. - New Orleans

I believe the reason so many people do not get what they want in this world is that they do not want it hard enough. Perseverance is a rare quality. Many people have ability along certain lines, but lack earnest striving and application. A little struggle and then the game is thrown up in despair. But to long for a thing so strongly that obstacles can be thrown aside, discouragement ignored, is the basis of all achievement. Anything really worth having in this world is dear, If we would only stop dreaming and longing and set earnestly to work to acquire the coveted thing, be it physical, mental or moral, it would be in our possession much sooner.

The heights by great men reached and kept Were not attained by sudden flight, But they, while their companions slept, Were toiling upward in the night. Kansas City Times.

Tact is not dishonesty, says an American writer. It does not mean the suppression of the truth nor the expression of an untruth, but it does mean the withholding of gratuitous disagreements from arguments in which they are quite superfluous; it also means the effort to induce an agreement kindly when possible, and if an agreement is impossible it demands a gracious acceptance of opposing views. Tact cannot be said to be synonymous with policy; tact is always honest, and policy cannot invariably be said to have that distinguishing

This affords an explanation of the original use of the shrill voice of the pig, and of his readiness to exercise it whenever he is in trouble. In exercise it whenever he is in trouble. In fact, whenever you hear a pig squealing you hear a testimony to the intrepld deeds of his race in the past as eloquent and emphatic as a Fourth of July oration. In the wild state it was his appeal for help, to which he knew his brethren, one and all, would respond with splendid loyalty and courage. Many a hunter has had to climb a tree to save his life after wounding one of a herd of pecarles. Now the hog would not expend his breath in ear aplitting squeaks unless he felt n ear-splitting squeaks unless he felt pretty sure of getting some benefit from so doing. His squealing, therefore, amounts to a lively expression of faith in the noble moral qualities of his brethren. It conveys precisely the same sentiment as do the words of a stump orator when he says: "Gentlemen, I well know your constancy and your courage! You have

CHINESE JOURNALISM. The Peking Gazette's Old Age and Its Two

The oldest and most important of the Chinese newspapers, the Peking Gazette, dates from the eighth century. It is a kind of bulletin of laws and official organ, publishing the details relative to every movement and incident in the imperial court, as well as the officials and a record of the sittings of the tribunals. These communications are furnished to The Gazette's editor by the functionaries of the palace; they are set up with an infinite care and are printed only after having been revised and corrected very attentively. They are not published consequently till two or three days after having been communicated to the editor, who meanwhile keeps publishing a daily unofficial edition of The Gazette. The paper is sold in the streets of Peking by news venders and criers. The subscription price of the official edition is about $4 a month; of the unofficial edition, $3. There is a manuscript edition which costs $6 monthly.

Outside of the capital the first Chinese paper published appeared at Shanghai about 30 years ago. It was soon followed by the Tien-tsin Journal and the Canton Journal. These newspapers were founded by Europeans, who were, in fact, only nominally in charge, the real inspirators and editors of those independent sheets being literati, mandarins anxious to place themselves beyond the reach of imperial persecutions. There are, indeed, no restrictive laws against the press in China, but neither are there laws guaranteeing the freedom of writing and speaking, so that Chinese journalists are always at the mercy of the police.

The Shanghai News, which is the type of Chinese independent papers. is sold for 1 cent a number. It contains an editorial similar to a magazine article, well studied, well written and treating of political and social questions. Official decrees are published in the columns of The News, as well as local information, cable dispatches and sporting reports, for there are horse races at Shanghai. The regular reporters are able and intelligent; they disguise themselves in order not to be ecognized as belonging to The News orps. But they have not yet come o the practice of interviewing.

The French Jesuit missionaries have founded a 1 cent newspaper, which was a monthly at first and is now semiweekly. It is read by the Chinese Catholics. There are also a few scientific and literary periodicals. It must be noted that as a general rule the Chinese papers do not publish articles bearing on questions of actual and practical politics, so that there are in the empire no opposition or semiofficial organs. They usually are satisfied with pubishing an eclectic review of affairs. They are read in the most faraway provinces. The Shanghai News' cir-Since 1885 the Shi lished an illustrated weekly supplement, which is a very ourious specimen of Chinese art in that line. Besides those native papers in Chinese there are some printed in English at Hongkong, a few in Portuguese at Macao and one German paper at Shanghai.—New York Tribune.

J. G. Brown's Models. J. G. Brown, the child painter, used to make sketches of things out of doors, with notes giving the color effects and positions, and so on, and then work on his paintings from the sketches. But a friend once said to him: "Brown, why don't you paint right from the model? The result is so much more natural." The remark struck Mr. Brown, and now he does everything from a model.

Mr. Brown used to get his models himself. He would seek them at Thirty-third street and Broadway, or round the Fifth Avenue hotel, or in City Hall square and Printing House row. "And it was pretty hard to get them sometimes," he said. They naturally knew nothing about posing as models to an artist and thought I was guying them when I said I would pay them to come and stand still while I painted them. But now some boys who have served a long time as models for me, but who have got too big to fill the bill any more, are still useful in picking out other boys who can serve the purpose. They know what I want and never bring me the wrong kind of boy."-John J. a' Becket in St.

- A curious incident varied the mon otony of official duty in the Chicago License Bureau the other day. "I must have the written consent of the young woman's parents, as she is under legal age, before I can issue a license for you," said the clerk to John A. White, who said the clerk to John A. White, who wished to wed Lena Collins, 17 years old. "But she has been married before," exclaimed the applicant. "She is Mrs. Lena Collins. That makes the parents' consent unnecessary." The clerk looked surprised, and the expectant groom explained that his fiance was married when 14 years old to a man who lost his life in an accident in the World's Fair Grounds. To be a wife and widow at 14, and a bride To be a wife and widow at 14, and a bride again at 17, is an experience such as dom falls to girls in this country. It a Dogberry had been in charge he would still have contended that consent of parents or guardian was necessary. "The fact is that when we are asked to say definitely what constitutes death, so far as outward and visible signs go, we doctors must confess with the rest of mankind that we can make no conclusive answer any more than we can if you ask us to define life. Except where decomposition has set in or where a body is so injured as to put the matter beyond question there is always a possibility of error. No physician should sign a death certificate in the case of a patient unless he was present at the final moment or unless he has made an examination after death is reported by those in attendance, although I know this precaution is not always taken. I have never had any cases of recovery after apparent death in my own practice, but I have known of them, and many others are recorded.

"For example, there is the instance of a physician in New York city who was called to see a student at a young ladies' seminary. He was unable to respond immediately. and upon his arrival he was met at the entrance by one of the young woman's fellow students, who said, 'It's no use now, doctor; she is gone.' He went to the room, where he found the girl lying as if dead. Her face was white, and her heart had ceased to beat. The other physician in attendance, who was present when the change took place, pronounced her dead. But the girl. as the doctor learned, was subject to attacks of what is known as grave hysteria, and it was during one of these attacks that she had apparently passed away. Considering that under the circumstances the evidences of death were by no means conclusive, he resorted to artificial respiration, with the result that the girl recovered completely and became a strong and healthy woman. Examples of this kind, while by no means common, are sufficiently numerous to show the danger in which friends and physicians are constantly placed of making mistakes of the most shocking na-

"Some years ago an award which had been placed in its hands by a professor in the University of Rome was made by the Academy of Sciences of Paris for an essay on the question, 'What Is an Infallible Sign of Death?' In the essay for which the award was made it was asserted that death could always be determined by a prolonged absence of beatings of the heart upon auscultation; that is to say, by listening either with or without the stethoscope. It was required, of course, that the auscultation should be performed by a physician, but this test was soon shown to be unreliable by numerous cases in which it was tried. The Paris Academy of Medicine has had for a number of years a standing prize of several thousand francs bequeathed to it by some marquis for a solution of the same great problem, but it has never been awarded."-Chicago Tribune.

State Political Gossip.

In the first place the general supposition is that Governor Evans is going to be a candidate for Senator Irby's seat in 1897. Acting on that supposition several other gentlemen are being talked of for the governorship, though it is not taken in consideration that Governor Evans will probably be a candidate him-self as he certainly can have a second term if he wants it. Anyway it is said that Senator R. B. Watson, of Edgefield, wouldn't dodge if the gubernatorial light ning headed his way. He is generally looked upon as a candidate for the place. Mr. Patterson, of Barnwell, has a number of friends who talk about running him for governor, and one of the rumors recently circulated is to the effect that Belton Watson, of Anderson, will be candidate.

Again it is asserted that General
Hemphill might make the gubernatorial race on a woman's suffrage platform.
